Report on Bioinformatics workshop

Two days hands on training workshop on Bioinformatics: Journey of learning sequences and structural Biology was organized by Department of Biotechnology ,L.A.D and Smt. R.P college for women, Nagpur on 18th October and 19th October 2022 in collaboration with Sai Biosystems private limited Nagpur. Dr. Alka Dhondge , Co-coordinator of Department of Biotechnology was convener of the program and Dr. Dilip Gore was the resource person for this workshop. Fifty nine students from Under Graduate and Post Graduate courses of Biotechnology Department enthusiastically participated in this two day workshop.

Dr Dilip Gore has expertise in the field of Bioinformatics and Biotechnology. He deliberated on the concept of Bioinformatics and it's correlation with life science. He explained the concept of Bioinformatics to the students in simple way. He explained the concept of gene and genome. According to Dilip Gore, genome studies have become central to a wide range of biological areas. The term genome derives from Gene+Ome. A gene is an ordered sequence of nucleotides located in a particular position on a particular chromosome that encodes specific functional products (i.e. protein or RNA molecules). It contains upstream regulatory regions. Genome, therefore represents the whole genetic information content of an organism.

Dr. Gore further added that the most important step in the analysis of a new genome is the identification of all its genes. It is important to understand the difference between prokaryotic and eukaryotic genes. In both cases, it is a unit of heredity; however, in eukaryotes this unit may include both the protein coding region and RNA-coding region of a DNA sequence. In prokaryotes, a gene refers only to the protein-coding region because multiple genes may be expressed from a single RNA molecule (an operon).

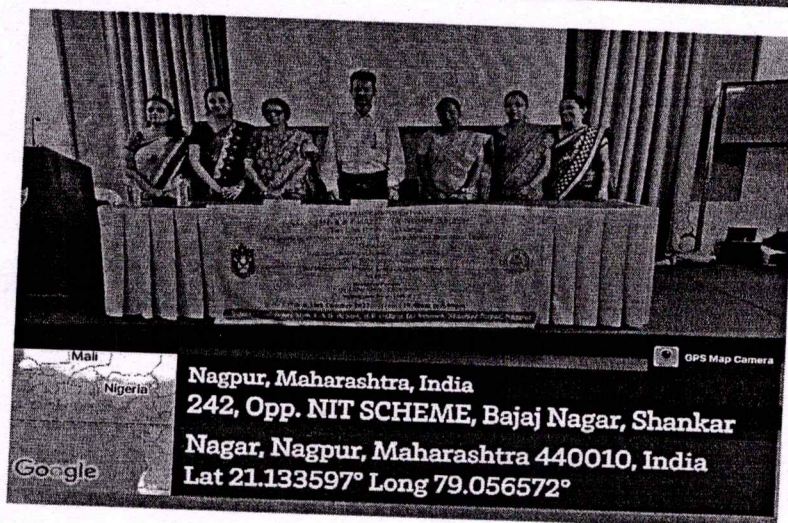

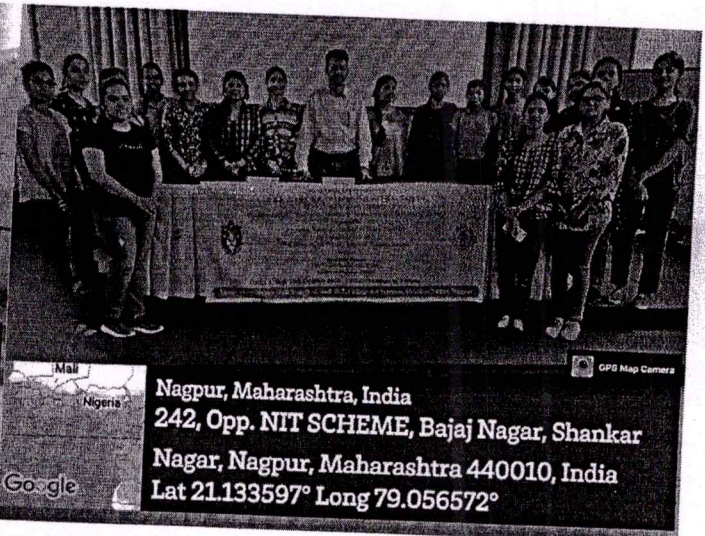

The standard methodology for gene identification is to find a similar sequence from another organism. This can be done using the BLAST and FASTA families of programs to search all the entries in sequence databases. The Basic Local Alignment Search Tool (BLAST) finds regions of local similarity between sequences. The program compares nucleotide or protein sequences to sequence databases and calculates the statistical significance of matches. BLAST can be used to infer functional and evolutionary relationships between sequences as well as help identify members of gene families. He focused on the FASTA format as well. FASTA is a text-based format for representing either nucleotide sequences or amino acid (protein) sequences, in which nucleotides or amino acids are represented using single-letter codes.

He explained about metagenomics and its importance. Metagenomics is the study of the structure and function of entire nucleotide sequences isolated and analyzed from all the organisms (typically microbes). He described about certain conserved regions such as (16s rRNA, 18s rRNA, ITS regions) which are amplified with PCR primers and sequenced. These conserved regions have variable regions that allow for identification of different groups of organisms.

ClustalW is a general purpose multiple sequence alignment program for DNA or proteins. Phylogenetic relationship can be understood by using clustal w

He has explained about the concept of proteomics theoretically explained about structure and different types of protein. The Protein Data Bank (PDB) is a database for the three-dimensional structural data of large biological molecules, such as proteins and nucleic acids. The data, is typically obtained by X-ray crystallography, NMR spectroscopy. Many other databases use protein structures deposited in the PDB. For example, SCOP and CATH classify protein structures. Dr Gore also spoke about PS2 software. This software helps in protein structure prediction provides valuable insights into function, and comparative modeling is one of the most reliable methods to predict 3D structures directly from amino acid sequences. 59 students participated in the workshop.

This pits called as a soak pit, for as long as it rains, will keep draining water into the ground. This will raise the water level temporarily as its point. Once it fills up, the pit starts bearing the water's weight, cushioned by the earth below. This weight loosens up the soil beneath and new pores open up from water to recharge.
